Friendship. From liability insurance required by Rotary International and the venue, as well as being curtailed on where we can purchase our alcohol from (in cases only from the Convention Center) and also a limitation on pour size, our hands are tied. Our social drinking at Conventions will be held offsite for the foreseeable future.

Literally hundreds of bottles line the shelves, with Malts, Scotches, Bourbons and Rye Whiskeys gathered from across the world, including many from the UK and Ireland, Japan and the USA.

Unsurprisingly the Taiwanese owner is a huge lover of Whiskey and has travelled the world to add to his collection and imported many others. The whiskeys are sorted by country and price, with the prices varying greatly depending on the rarity and age of the Whiskey.

The Malt is a comfortable and cozy place, with many other friendly whiskey aficionados keen to share their favorites.

TAIWANESE WHISKY BY TERRY MOORE

When you find yourself in Taipei, tasting the local whisky is a must. The island's standout producer is Kavalan Distillery, which shocked the world in 2015 when its Solist Vinho Barrique was named the 'World's Best Single Malt' at the World Whiskies Awards. This global recognition is backed by a serious local passion; Taiwan is the world's third-largest consumer of single malts. While the government held a strict monopoly on alcohol production until 2002 via the Taiwan Tobacco and Liquor Corporation, liberalization sparked a distilling renaissance. Soon after, in 2011, Taiwanese whisky famously outperformed three top Scotches at a Burns Night tasting in Scotland.

Seeking to imitate Kavalan's success, the Taiwan government, which had long abandoned whisky production, returned to the market with the Omar brand. There is no standard style for Taiwanese whisky dictated either by law or tradition, leaving producers free to experiment and innovate. Due to Taiwan's subtropical climate, whisky matures two to three times as fast as it would in Scotland or Ireland. The "faster maturation" is due to higher evaporation rates (the "Angel's Share"), which is roughly 10-12% in Taiwan compared to 2% in Scotland. Taiwanese whisky often has notes of subtropical fruit and in general has a creamy character; however, there are quite a few variations.

KAVALAN DISTILLERY

One of the brilliant things about new distilleries is that history is documented completely. Kavalan is leading the way in Taiwanese whisky, with a distillery that poured out its first whisky on Saturday, March 11, 2006 at 3:30 p.m. Since then, new releases have hit the market, and countless awards have gone to the distillery. With the quick maturity time and being allowed creativity is part of the reason that Kavalan has been able to make such a splash after only being around for a couple of decades. Kavalan also leans heavily on aging in sherry casks, which many argue makes for a smoother, more approachable whisky, especially for newcomers.

TAICHUNG DISTILLERY

Taichung Distillery is also home to a beautifully landscaped garden that contains waterfalls, bridges, koi and lotus ponds, and elaborately landscaped greenery. It's all maintained by distillery employees, and it's been celebrated by the city's government as one of the most scenic locations in Taichung. That's a lovely testament to dedication, and yes, you can visit the Taichung Distillery. A large part of Taichung's philosophies align in respecting traditions but taking a modern approach, involving science, and creating an experience that bridges both worlds with an outstanding whisky that holds its own against the big hitters.

NANTOU DISTILLERY

The Nantou Distillery, (which is the Government behind Omar whisky) has actually been around for a long time. It was founded in the late 1970s, and for decades, it made other spirits until whisky production started in 2008. The whisky debuted in 2013, and when it did, it was under a Gaelic name: Omar means "amber." It immediately started bringing home the awards. It's the unique balance that makes this one stand out head and shoulders above competitors. Noting that this bottle offers a rich, oaky profile with balanced sweetness.

The distillery sources casks from all over the world for aging its whisky, using sherry casks from Spain, bourbon casks from the U.S., and casks from its own winery, as just part of what imparts a unique flavor to various bottles in its collections. For its part, Omar's single malt is a sherry cask-aged whisky, where the woody, smoky, chocolatey flavors really come through, along with a fruity richness that has the ideal sweetness for a show stopping cocktail.

Yushan is a product of the Nantou Distillery — and yes, that's the same distillery that produces Omar. If the name sounds familiar, there's a good reason for that: Yushan is the highest mountain in Taiwan, and it's also known as the Jade Mountain. The whisky that shares its name is lauded for being Carefully balanced, wonderfully complex, and the sort of thing that you sit and sip when you want a moment to slow down and truly enjoy being present.

Taiwanese whisky is characterized by its easy-to-drink nature and flavor. Neat, Big Block or in a cocktail, it pairs nicely with savory or sweets. The smoothness is characteristic of the whisky coming out of the Taiwan area, and although it, too, is more expensive than many American or Irish bottles, our experts suggest that it's absolutely worth the investment for a special-occasion kind of bottle that you want to savor and enjoy. Give them a try while at the Rotary International Conference this June.

GORDON & MACPHAIL BY LARS GREGERSEN

Gordon & MacPhail – The Independent Bottler of Elgin

Located in the historic Speyside town of Elgin, Gordon & MacPhail is one of the most respected and influential independent bottlers in the Scotch whisky industry. The company has built its reputation on sourcing, maturing, and bottling single malt whiskies from distilleries across Scotland. For more than a century, it has helped shape the modern appreciation of single malt whisky and remains a key figure in the global whisky market.

Gordon & MacPhail was founded in 1895 by James Gordon and John Alexander MacPhail as a grocery store in Elgin. The shop originally sold imported goods such as tea, coffee, wine, and spices. However, because Elgin lies in the heart of Speyside—one of Scotland's most famous whisky-producing regions—the founders also stocked local malt whiskies

Early in the company's history, a young employee named John Urquhart joined the business and became instrumental in shaping its future. Urquhart developed relationships with nearby distilleries and began selecting casks of spirit to mature under the company's own supervision. By 1915 he had become a senior partner, and the Urquhart family has owned the business ever since. This approach—buying new-make spirit or casks from distilleries and maturing them independently, laid the foundation for Gordon & MacPhail's identity as an independent bottler.

The Role of an Independent Bottler

An independent bottler differs from a distillery in that it does not necessarily produce its own spirit. Instead, it acquires casks from distilleries, matures them in its own warehouses, and bottles the whisky under its own label. Gordon & MacPhail became one of the pioneers of this practice. Through long-standing relationships with distilleries, the company often supplied its own casks to be filled with new spirit, which was then matured in its warehouses in Elgin for decades before bottling. Today the company has bottled hundreds of whiskies from around 70 different distilleries, making it one of the largest and most influential independent bottlers in Scotland.

This system allowed Gordon & MacPhail to release unique expressions of famous distilleries such as:

- The Glenlivet Distillery
- The Macallan Distillery
- Glen Grant Distillery

These bottlings often differ significantly from the official distillery releases, showcasing alternative cask types, ages, or maturation styles.

Rare and Historic Whisky Releases

One of Gordon & MacPhail's distinguishing features is its vast inventory of aged casks, some of which date back to the early 20th century. The company has released numerous historic whiskies, including extremely old single malts from long-closed distilleries.

For example, the company has bottled rare vintage whiskies such as:

- A 70-year-old Glenlivet distilled in 1943, one of the oldest single malts ever released.
- A 60-year-old Linkwood whisky from 1956, released in extremely limited quantities.

More recently, Gordon & MacPhail released whisky from a 1940 Glenlivet cask aged for 85 years, considered the oldest commercially released Scotch whisky. These rare releases demonstrate the company's long-term philosophy of patient maturation and cask stewardship.

Key Whisky Ranges

Over time, Gordon & MacPhail has created several well-known whisky series, each highlighting different aspects of its cask inventory:

- Connoisseurs Choice – A long-running range featuring single malts from many Scottish distilleries.
- Private Collection – Rare single casks selected by members of the Urquhart family.
- Discovery Range – Entry-level expressions focusing on flavour profiles such as bourbon cask, sherry cask, or smoky styles.

These ranges have helped introduce whisky drinkers to distilleries and styles that might otherwise remain unknown.

From Bottler to Distiller

Although Gordon & MacPhail built its reputation as an independent bottler, the company later expanded into whisky production itself. In 1993, it purchased Benromach Distillery near Forres and revived it as its own single malt distillery. More recently, it opened a new distillery called The Cairn Distillery in 2022, marking a significant step toward producing whisky entirely under its own control. In recent years the company has indicated it will gradually shift focus toward these in-house brands rather than filling new casks from external distilleries.

Legacy in the Whisky Industry

For more than 125 years, Gordon & MacPhail has played a crucial role in the development of the single malt category. At a time when most Scotch whisky was destined for blends, the company championed single malts and preserved rare casks that later became historic bottlings. Today, the Elgin-based firm remains a family-owned business, run by the fourth generation of the Urquhart family. Its warehouses, filled with maturing casks from across Scotland, represent one of the most significant private whisky stocks in the world.

Gordon MacPhail Whisky Shop in Elgin

You can visit the shop, buy a bottle of whisky, or you can book a tasting. They have several options up to: The Sky is the Limit. I personally tried a tasting through the decades:

- 1991 Rosebank 51,2%
- 1984 Caol Ila 52,3% 38 yo.
- 1977 Clynelish 45,7%
- 1976 Banff 50,4%
- 1973 Glen Mhor 47,2% (pictured)
- 1969 Linkwood 45,8%
- 1956 Glen Grant 56,5% 65 yo. (pictured)
- 1949 Glenlivet 49,3% (pictured)
- 1939 Mortlach 44,4% 75 yo.

It was an awesome tasting of extraordinary old whiskies which I really enjoyed. It is a bit strange to think about, the next generation of whisky drinkers will be amazed over the whiskies from the beginning of this 21st Century, and the whiskies I have tasted includes whisky distilled at the end of the 19th Century.

RECAP OF OUR ROBERT BURNS ZOOM MEETING BY JENNIFER WALTER

Our annual Robert Burns celebration in January was a resounding success, bringing together members via Zoom from the USA, Australia, Cambodia, Canada, New Zealand, and Spain. Attendees enjoyed a unique 'show and tell' of their chosen beverages, sharing the stories that made each drink special. A highlight of the gathering was a snippet reading of Burns' 'Scotch Drink' shared by Jennifer Walter. We are pleased to share the first stanza below, alongside its English translation. The full length version can be found at the Robert Burns Federation Website here.

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Give him strong drink until he wink,
That is sinking in despair;
And liquor good to fire his blood,
That is pressed with grief and care:
There let him drink deeply, and deep carouse,
With bumpers flowing over,

Till he forgets his loves or debts,
An' minds his griefs no more.

And minds his grieves no more.

COPPER, STILLS AND PENNIES BY TERRY MOORE

The United States has stopped producing the iconic American Penny with Lincoln's face emblazoned on it. Why? My first thought is that I have been dumping my pennies into our coin jar for years, increasing the shortage. The real reason is due to the increase in micro distilleries producing whiskies requiring a copper made still, and the manufacturers know that copper isn't just a pretty face. So we can blame still manufactures for hoarding all the copper pennies to produce their alcohol stills. Ok, not really, but when it comes to copper distillation equipment, the copper also serves several useful purposes.

Copper is man's oldest metal, dating back more than 10,000 years. The metal available at the time, copper would have been the metal of choice for producing all manner of implements used to make ancient man's life easier. And, since the practice of spirits distillation is some two thousand years old, it makes sense that copper would be used. As luck would have it, this ancient metal allows for an easy process of changing shape as copper is very malleable. It's soft and easily shaped, allowing coppersmiths to build complex stills (like pot stills with specific angles) that influence reflux and spirit character.

For some reason, electrons can move freely through copper. These conducting electrons aid copper in being a good conductor of heat and cold. For spirits distilling purposes, applying heat and the removal of heat is a requisite. Copper's high thermal conductivity ensures uniform heating, preventing scorching and promoting consistent distillation.

Less than optimal fermentation practices can lead to poor yeast health as fermentation works toward completion. Copper has antibacterial qualities, the characters of copper allow it to have a chemical reaction inside of distillation equipment to remove volatile sulfur compounds released by the yeast during fermentation. Copper reacts with sulfur compounds (like hydrogen sulfide) produced during fermentation, converting them into copper sulfide, which is removed, cleaning up harsh flavors within the alcohol.

Continuing our "copper" theme, we decided to share a few micro distilleries with the word "copper" in them. Read on!

COPPER FIDDLE DISTILLERY

UNIQUELY CRAFTED FROM MIDWEST BARLEY, CORN, & RYE

The best way we can think of to describe Copper Fiddle Distillery Bourbon Whiskey is to paraphrase the old adage that age may result in wisdom, but in taste, our young bourbon whiskey stands up to the old guys. The rich color and exceptional taste comes from the marriage of small toasted charred American white oak barrels and our Midwest-sourced three grain corn-based spirit.

A random sampling of tasting notes from recent competitions in which we have entered include: "very smooth", "deep caramel", "vanilla undertones", "dark chocolate", "hints of butterscotch", "toasty oak flavors" and "lingering finish".

Our Bourbon Whiskey is one-pass distilled in an "old style" American made copper pot still from Arkansas, capturing the hearts of each distillation. While excellent in all of your traditional bourbon whiskey cocktails, we like it neat or on the rocks with a slice of lemon peel.

COPPER FOX DISTILLERY

Owner Rick Wasmund loved the smell of burning wood. He became more aware of the aromatic properties of different woods and the different flavors of wood smoke when used for grilling. He discovered whisky tasting events with his dad and fell in love with Scotch Whisky; especially the peaty kind, partly because of the smell of the smoked peat and partly because of the rich fruitiness of the malted barley. He knew the whisky would taste great if the barley was flavored with fruitwood smoke instead of peat and began to search for a flavor that he soon discovered did not exist. His search eventually led him to Scotland, interning at Bowmore Distillery, where he learned the traditional art of floor malting barley. It was then that he had the revelation that he could make a great American Single Malt Whisky and the birth of Copper Fox Distillery was born.

Upon his return he began the search for a location and invited family and friends to invest and be a part of his dream. Three years later, “Wasmund’s Original Single Malt Whisky” was launched into the marketplace as the first applewood-aged whisky in the world. The distillery in Sperryville opened in January of 2005, and with it, the first US distillery malt floor and kiln since the repeal of Prohibition.

All of the grains used are grown locally by one farmer, and the 6-row Thoroughbred barley was developed for Copper Fox at Virginia Tech. We floor malt the barley in the traditional style, which allows us to develop and maintain a connection to the grain throughout our entire production process.

Our innovation begins in the kiln, where instead of peat, we use local fruitwoods that gently smoke and dry the grain. Copper Fox is the only distillery on the planet to mature their whisky with toasted applewood. This process further develops and enhances the flavor of the smoky malt, resulting in a complex and singular flavor experience.

Copper Fox Distillery's Dawson's Reserve Bourbon is a unique, hand-crafted bourbon that showcases the rich heritage of Virginia. This bourbon is crafted with a wheated mash bill of 60% corn, 20% wheat, and 20% hand-malted barley, using peachwood smoked barley. Aged in new oak barrels for over four years, this bourbon is named in honor of the late Billy Dawson, a Virginia farmer whose company supplies Copper Fox with grain.

Appearance: Copper color, with a slight amber glow.

Nose: Sweet corn with notes of peach, pear, and apricots, complemented by a light smoke from the malted barley.

Palate: The malted barley's sticky sweetness shines through, with light notes of peach and smoke.

Finish: Medium-length finish with many layers, including hints of orchard fruit, baking spice, syrupy caramel sauce, and a touch of char. The finish is balanced and smooth.

COPPER BARREL DISTILLARY

The legendary moonshiner Buck Nance of Wilkes County, NC, was born in the heart of the Appalachian Mountains. His passion for distillation was passed down from generations of his family, and he quickly became known for his exceptional skills and the smooth taste of his moonshine. Nance operated his stills deep in the mountains, evading the authorities and winning the hearts of locals with his generosity. He was a true master of his craft, using only the finest ingredients and perfecting his recipes over time.

And, his legacy continues to shine, inspiring a new generation of moonshiners to carry on his tradition of producing top-quality, truly authentic moonshine.

Their flagship product is an award-winning moonshine, White Lightning. They source their grains from local farms and mills. Their corn comes from Linney's Water Mill, who has been in business for 187 years.

<https://copperbarrel.com/>

COPPER CREEK DISTILLARY

Co-owners Greg Shuford and Randy Berry were neighbors in the Black Mountains of North Carolina for years before they discovered their shared love of moonshine. Once they did, they knew right away that Greg's business sense and Randy's expertise with a still made them the perfect pair to create the first legal distillery in a four county area since prohibition. Randy learned how to make moonshine from some of the older men in the community when he was younger. Building on the generational knowledge gained from the community and his own experimentation making homemade wine and hard cider, he quickly became an innovative and talented master distiller. Randy's refined palate and years of experience make his moonshine exceptional in its smoothness and drinkability. We have seventeen flavors to date and are adding more every season! Our premier products include a 90 proof IL-LIC-IT Shine, an 80 proof Grape Shine, and an 80 proof Apple Shine.

COPPERCRAFT DISTILLERY

Coppercraft was founded in 2012, in Holland, Michigan. The distillery is nestled in the manufacturing coast of West Michigan, where our inspiration is drawn from the legacy of industrious workers who created quality goods and exported their handiwork across the nation. The auto manufacturers, furniture craftsmen, farmers, and entrepreneurs of Michigan left an enormous heritage. They proved that craft and time yield incredible results.

ABV, 90.6 Proof 750 ML $50

Although we are relatively young, we are hardworking and passionate. Since our inception, we have continuously perfected and expanded our spirit offerings to include whiskey, gin, vodka, and rum. We were the first Michigan distiller to offer canned cocktails, and we are proud to be an official partner of the Detroit Lions. In 2018, we were named the Michigan Distillery of the Year by the New York International Spirits Competition. A year later, the Detroit Metro Times named us the Best Michigan Whiskey.

Barrels of 9+ year old sourced bourbons are blended to create a rich, smooth flavor. We use brandy blending and proofing techniques that take three months from barrel to bottle. 45.3%

MEDIA ROTARY CLUB WHISKEY RAFFLE BY LARRY SMOOSE

The Media Rotary started its whiskey raffle in 2021 as a result of the COVID pandemic, which was not allowing in-person events. Our primary fund-raiser at that time was a Bingo night. Larry Smoose got the idea from a Whisk(e)y DRAM newsletter that had a variety of fund-raising ideas, including a whiskey raffle.

Larry presented the idea to the club and they thought it was worth trying. The key is to have an iconic (well-known) whiskey as the grand prize and Larry immediately thought about Pappy Van Winkle. What better whiskey than the one that is so well known and so hard to get. That first year we went online and found a bottle for $1100. Once we had Pappy, I knew that we would do pretty well. We also decided to have different types of whiskey, since everyone has their own preferences – Scotch, Bourbon, Rye and Irish. So we came up with six “baskets” of different whiskies and the Pappy as the Grand Prize.

Choosing what whiskies to buy is a challenge, and some members donate nice bottles. We are always on the look-out for unusual or hard-to-get bottles. We want desirable bottles so that even those who don't win the grand prize feel like it was worth buying chances, so we usually look for one or two whiskies in each prize that go for $200+.

The first few years we allowed those buying chances to decide into which “basket” to put their tickets, which made for a lot of work for Gary Zebrowski, our intrepid treasurer and keeper of raffle records. So, this year we are drawing numbers for each prize. We also decided to limit the number of chances to 500, using a Bingo-type of cage with small numbered balls.

While you don't have to be present to win, You are certainly welcome to come to the live event, held at DRAM member Margaret Kuo's Kitchen in Media, PA. This year it will be on Thursday, May 21, beginning at 5:30 p.m. The $60 price is well worth it with Chinese dishes that will be worth every bit of the cost.

A couple of years ago a DRAM member, Buck Vocelle, Jr., won the Pappy! And last year a DRAM member won one of the lower, but still great bottles. So check out the flyer, scan the QR code or go to www.mediarotary.org and buy your chances.
